

Water

San Pellegrino

Is a comune in the province of Bergamo, Lombardy, Italy. The water may originate from a layer of rock 400 metres (1,300 ft) below the surface, where it is mineralized from contact with limestone and volcanic rocks. It emerges from three deep springs. (750 ml)

12.00

San Benedetto still/sparkling

12.00

Traces to the Republic of Venice when it was the favourite of aristocratic Venetian families. The water, tapped at the surface in Ancient times, is now drawn from 1,000 feet below to ensure that all its original features are unchanged.

Evian

Is a French brand of mineral water coming from several sources near Évian-les-Bains, on the south shore of Lake Geneva. (750 ml)

12.00

Perrier

Made from a spring in Vergèze in the Gard département of France. The spring is naturally carbonated. Both the water and natural carbon dioxide gas are captured independently.

Gize still / sparkling

47.00

In the place where Gize's source is found, in the eastern-most reaches of Canada in Nova Scotia, mighty glaciers not only sculpted the landscape millions of years ago, but also left a priceless treasure deep beneath the earth's surface. Geological formations that are permeated with veins of gold, and a water that sealed in stone – has preserved the glaciers' purity for all this time.

Tasmanian Rain

22.00

Is rainwater captured on the pristine North West coast of the island of Tasmania, Australia. The water is collected just minutes of where the World Meteorological Organization records the world's purest air. The rain, has traveled eastward via air currents over Antarctica and 10,000 miles of ocean. As a result, Tasmanian rain contains only 17 parts per million of dissolved solids. Tasmanian rain is collected by a custom-designed catchment facility, and never touches the ground.
